The inhabi-tants of this town used to meet with the inhiabitants of Nelson, and formed them-selves into large companies for the pur-pose of killing wild game; Captain Loan Mills, of Nelson was the chief commander of that township. At a hunt in the south-west part of this town they killed in one day 85 deer and 7 bears, some wolves, and a large number of Turkeys. A portion of the early settlers and their successors used to stent themselves with killing 40 deers, each successive fall and winter. They most always killed that number and netimes more. Thus it was that the deer and wild game began to dumnish from year to year, till at length the last deer was killed by Daniel Chalker. It was a large male deer, with a huge pair of orns, and on each horn five prongs. Mr C. has them preserved to this day, with some others. Captain Henry White, one of the first settlers, used to drive from five to nine yoke of Oxen in one string, with a to nine yoke of Oxen in one string, with a large load, always having his heaviest behind on the tongue of his wagon.
